Greg, thanks so much for letting me come by the other day, and for the generous lunch, too! Here is my set of notes, with some ideas scribbled in too. Would love to keep working with you on this!

General observations:

- Announcements are short, to-the-point, and crisp.
- Love that you make time for a spiritual thought.
- The tophat questions were really good.
    - They're a little low-rigor. What do they need for the test?
    - The error analysis is really a great opportunity. You might even bump the rigor up by saying "what is the best wrong answer?" Then discuss why it's so clever.
    - The questioning is good, but it's one person at a time. Switching from "Name, what's the answer to question?" I like to "Everyone, what's the answer to question? Pause for fifteen seconds. Name, what do you think?"
    - I wonder if you could do vocab words. Something short and quick. Some kind of quick study so that they leave knowing some words that they didn't know before. It also models for them how to learn things.
- I love the teaches. I have ideas on this.
    - Have you heard of the teaching sheets? You might be interested by it.
    - I like having the prep before they come. It seems to work really well.
- Clarity is high, interest is good. Students are enjoying the lesson, and you're a good, clear teacher.
    - There are a few moments of slowness, but the pace is generally good.
    - Engagement is mostly on point, though there are a few students who are doing other work from time to time.
    - I think you have a solid class, and you've clearly thought through it all.

I've just sent Arik an email about consultancy projects, reading checks/oral exams, and teaches. If he has interest, we can look at video recording each!

Also, I enjoyed your talk on Sunday—while wrestling with four littles, it felt very good to hear "everyone pretends to have it all figured out, but none of us have it together!" It was a relief.

I appreciate you my friend!
